

What would you give if you could change a life?

What would you give if you could encourage a young boy to love reading and learning, so he enters school ready to succeed?

The Parent-Child Home Program helps children like Jamel, who at three years old never showed any interest in looking at books, even if his mom offered to read with him. It took just a couple weeks for the JFCS Home Visitor to engage Jamel with the colorful books she brought to his home. Jamel's mom also participated in the program. She learned strategies to make reading fun. After two years of learning together, on the day of Jamel's graduation, Jamel told his home visitor, "I want to be a teacher when I grow up."

PCHP is just one of 40 programs at JFCS providing essential services to 16,000 people of all backgrounds and at all stages of life.
